A "Stradivarius" Concert. Music lovers the world over will be in terested to know of the chamber concer given here recently by the Duke and Duchess de Champeselice. It is not known that the like were ever given in the work before, certainly not in Paris. The distinguishing feature was not the quality of length of the programme, but the fact that all the instruments were made by the great Stradyarius. The duke is a connoi all respects musical, and has spent much me and money in securing specimens of the Italian maker's work. The musicia who took part in his chamber concer-gladly laid aside their own instr-ments to use those that the drike plan before them, and the result was such interpretation of the best quartets of B oven, Schumman and Mendelssohn as hi never been equaled, in respect of sonority and richness of tone, at least. The duke owns eight instruments of Strudivarius, among which is a violin r cently bought in England for the modest sum of 50,000 francs, or, to put it more comprehensibly, $10,000. It was known in London as Bets' Strad, because Bets had bought it over sixty years age for £1, about $5. It was made in 1704, and has been so well preserved that it looks almost like a new violin. The duke is arranging for other concerts, in which he expects to utilize his eight instruments in the per formance of Memlelssohn's octette. The number of violin collectors is not great, but their passion is, and it is that that puts the price to such an extravagant height. The fact is that the cheapness with which a newspaper can be brought out in Paris is a strong temptation for people to try their luck as editors and publishers.

The Petit Journal and The Figure being Indications are that the price of coke will run off at Marinoni's—and beince any one with credit at a printing establishment can easily compete, in promptness of issue, with the older organs. Printing, too, is cheap in Paris, and a few thousand dol-lars will, as to typography, put a daily in the ring for a month or two at any rate. Then, the advertising business being habitually in the hands of agents, contracts of some sort or other are easily made, although something like a guargiven a verdict of $351,965.50 against the antee of permanency is exacted by the Chicago, Portage and Superior Railroad for fermiers before the fourth page of the paper meets with any encouragement at

Curious Literary Discovery

A singular literary discovery was made at the monastery of Mekitaristra, in the island of St. Lazarus, at Venice. A pet monkey had climbed to the top of a book case, and was amusing itself in initiating the grimaces of a venerable monk, who was trying to induce it to descend. The animal, in a sudden freak, seized hold of a bundle of papers and, breaking the string, showered down on the father's head a number of letters, the ink of which had become yellow with age. They proved to be a long correspondence between Lord Byron and the monks of St. Lazarus whom he had once resided.—Chicago Tribune.
